

PAWSitively Yours... from the Sceptre King

Here I SIT,

perched atop my soapbox ready to have a chat with you. Yes, I admit I have elevated the common soapbox to a beautiful blue silk cushion, but I believe that is befitting the new consciousness of treating yourself royally...or the way you deserve to be treated. Yes, EVERYthing changes when we do that! “Life is Good!”, I say.

Speaking of good, I had lots of nice comments about my ‘white heart glowing’ in the last issue. I just want to remind you that what you see in me, you also see in yourself. There is, without a doubt, a wave of change rolling round the world, and I’m proud to purrrrr my part in it. As I strive to bring peace to the world around me, I am sometimes overwhelmed by the expansiveness of the job at hand. Yet, I have been especially observant of the young people this year and how quick they are to implement change.

Hence the topic of my new ‘bandwagon’ or ‘silk cushion’...it’s - what and how, we teach our children.

Recently, I came across these photos a reader sent me some time ago...I only have room to show you 2 but you get the drift. Little gold kitten and ‘decent sized’ rodent, perched in conversation on the window ledge. It would appear no one told them they were arch enemies, that history proves that one was born to destroy the other. What I see instead is two members of different species, laying down tradition and potential differences, cuddled up together in loving friendship with each other. Warm and fuzzy together, safe in each other’s arms.

Think about it for a moment - it appears someone neglected to tell these two they were not supposed to be friends. Or someone did tell them, and they decided they liked each other anyway and ignored the rules. Think about it! What if we started right now teaching our children (regardless of how many legs they have) that it’s OK to leave the past behind and make friends with the future. What if the dove of peace flew through your heart right now and left an invisible awakening so profound you could not suppress your joy, and you ran out and shared the news with the children who were in fact waiting for your arrival! Imagine if they were just waiting for the OK from you to start a NEW way of interacting with each other? What if they were waiting for you to explain to them the power of patience and self control, of compassion and fair play, of self worth and team spirit living hand in hand? WHAT IF you knew your influence on just one child made the difference in bringing peace to the world?

How much can we learn from a small cat and his new best friend? Remember the freedom trust brings! Imagine sharing that truth with a child.
